Dental health begins at birth with some very basic habits being established in the preschool years of life. Since primary or “baby” teeth are lost and replaced by permanent teeth, some people think that early care of these teeth is not important. However, primary teeth help determine the path permanent teeth will take. Therefore, good dental habits now will help support healthy permanent teeth, while neglect of these primary teeth may lead to dental problems later. Regular dental checkups help the dentist locate and correct problems early.

Our dental health education program at school is planned to continue what should already be happening at home. It encourages good habits, good dental hygiene, and regular checkups. A defined first step in our program is the entry level examination.
